LONDON GAMES

I went to London and...

This is a memory game for two or more people.

1. The first person thinks of something they might see in London, and says:

   "I went to London and I saw a black taxi."

2. The next person repeats the first thing, then thinks of something else they might see.

   "I went to London and I saw a black taxi and Buckingham Palace."

3. Keep taking turns to list the items that have already been said and to add more, until someone can’t remember the correct order or can’t think of something new to say.

   "I went to London and I saw a black taxi, Buckingham Palace and a boat on the river."

   "I went to London and I saw a black taxi and... um...err..."

Guarding the Palace

The guards outside Buckingham Palace have to stand very still when they’re on duty. In this game, everyone pretends to be guards, except for one person who is the Captain, who tries to make them move.

1. The guards all stand to attention.

2. The Captain tries to make them move or laugh by telling jokes or making funny faces.

3. When a guard moves, he or she becomes a Captain too, and tries to make the others move. The last person standing completely still is the winner.

He’s the winner.
